The Brass Bell—a narrative non-fiction account of the life of Marion Parsons and the history of Cherry Road School—is here!

The book is nearly 300 pages in length and filled with pictures of the “Olden Days,” stories told to the author by those who were there, and a story crafted from journals and letters and remembrances that will satisfy anyone who longs for a taste of days gone by. What happens to the woman who traveled by train to teach in a frontier town on the Canadian border in 1924? Why did she return to start a school in a hen house in her father’s cherry orchard?

The Brass Bell, written by Nancy “Camille” Cole, the great niece of Marion Parsons, has been published by Sahalie Publishing Company, a small, independent, non-profit press located in Eugene, Oregon.

Sahalie Publishing Company was incorporated as a non-profit 501(c)(3) Oregon corporation in 1977. Our primary purpose is to provide a forum where people can express their ideas via the written word and other multi-media channels. Our premier publication was You Can Can with Honey, by Nancy Cosper. Over the years we have published books and tapes in the arena of holistic health and the welfare of the environment. Sahalie’s holistic health materials have been provided free of charge to children and adults in need. Our current mission is to provide a literary forum and include memoir and historical non-fiction in the work we support—to provide opportunities for emerging artists including literary, visual, and multimedia whose work might otherwise go unsupported.

Tax-deductible donations are appreciated and 100% will go toward publishing and promoting the work of emerging artists and authors whose work meets the standards of Sahalie Publishing Company.
